

TURBANS, BEARDS, & WHITE SUPREMACY: INTERSECTIONS OF RACE & RELIGION IN AMERICA

TUESDAY, MARCH 27

3:30PM, ARNOLD HALL

There's nothing inherent about racism -- it's a social construct that we learn collectively. The experiences of Sikh Americans illustrates this point well. While they have a unique visible appearance, few Americans actually know who they are. Come learn about the Sikh religion, their experiences with racialization in America, and what this tells us about how we think about race in America today.

Co-sponsored by Religious Studies, African American Studies, Political Science, History, & International Studies.

Dr. Simran Jeet Singh

is an educator and activist who writes and speaks regularly on issues of diversity, civil rights, religion, and hate violence. Simran is a professor of religion at Trinity University & Senior Religion Fellow for the Sikh Coalition. This year, he serves as the Henry R. Luce Fellow for Religion and International Affairs at NYU's Center for Religion and Media.

COLLEGE of CHARLESTON

DEPARTMENT OF RELIGIOUS STUDIES